The President Reports

ROBERT M. SWITZLER

In the time of war, when civilian activity is curtailed and military activity greatly increased, many of us feared that Toastmaster s movement would remain in status quo, or even go into a decline. Instead, it has enjoyed a greater growth in members and in strength than in any one of its previous twenty years.

We have more members, more new clubs and more speech services to the individual, the community and the nation than ever before. From a membership of about 3700 in 1943, we have grown to more than 7,000 in 1945. During the past fiscal year we have chartered 54 new clubs.

We have entered three new states during the year, and have added largely to our strength in the twenty-nine states previously on our list. We have a right to be proud of Toastmasters services during the war, with more than 35,000 speeches for War Bonds, Red Cross and other war enterprises.

How did all this come about?

A number of things have contributed to our growth, including better service to members, made possible by increased income; the general demand for better speech throughout the nation; the enlarging need for Toastmasters services in time of war; and the personal contacts which your President has been permitted to make in his visitations, which have carried him into every district, with one exception.

There is a general demand in America for better speech and better speakers. With this comes the demand for better training and more of it, which we can furnish.

My greatest experience as your President was the personal meeting with hundreds, or may I say thousands, of loyal Toastmasters, each intent on improving his personality, increasing his earning capacity through speech training, and enlarging his usefulness in his community and nation. These personal contacts were made possible by travel of more than 12,000 miles, mostly by air, in the course of which I was able to bring a personal message from headquarters to our clubs so widely scattered throughout the United States and Canada.

My greatest honor was to be President in the year when our organization made arrangements to relieve our Founder, Ralph C. Smedley, of the tremendous load he was carrying practically alone at the Home Office, by securing the services of O. E. (Waddy) Wadenstein, who is now actively at work in the Santa Ana Headquarters. He is to serve as Director of Extension, giving special attention to the building up of our present clubs and the organization of new ones.

Our structural framework of districts, presided over by the District

Governors, aided by Lieutenant Governors in the areas and Deputy Governors in the clubs is more efficiently working than ever before. Without the faithful work of these leaders, our growth during the past year could not have taken place. The new men chosen as leaders for the coming year have solid foundations to build on, and have new opportunities for advancement because of what has been so well done by their predecessors.

I offer my thanks and commendation to all those who have worked with me during the past year, and I ask, in behalf of the men who are to lead for the coming year, that same loyal and enthusiastic support which has been given to me and my associates during our term.

There is only one direction in which Toastmasters can move, and that is, forward.

The Convention

The Convention of Toastmasters International, to be held at Los Angeles on July 27 and 28, will be restricted in attendance even more than had been anticipated. Travel conditions will keep away some who had expected to be present from a distance. It will have to be a "proxy" convention. Business matters have been submitted to the clubs for consideration, and most of the clubs have designated their proxies. But in spite of war and its difficulties, Toastmasters will move ahead. Perhaps a big, generally attended convention will be possible next year. That possibility should cause every one of us to redouble his efforts to help win the war.

America Must Lead the World

By D. MASTON JAMES, General Toastmasters Club of Los Angeles

THE eyes of the world are upon America today as we go forward in leadership—as a nation, as a community, as individuals. We must not fail them.

The greatest element in establishing world peace is understanding — understanding between nations as between individuals. As we come to know and understand each other better we come to respect each other, and to have a proper regard for rights and responsibilities. Then we are better fitted to live together in a world at peace.

One of the greatest forces to build understanding among men is the Toastmasters Club. With its simple and practical program of frank discussion and analytical listening, followed by free exchange of opinions and criticisms, the Toastmasters organization has one of the best techniques to promote understanding and cooperation. But the question arises, how to get our program into effective use.

I have two suggestions to offer.

First, let our own club volunteer to sponsor a Toastmasters Club in some foreign country, assuming responsibility for its inception and guidance and, if need be, for some portion of the cost. Then, let other clubs make a similar offer. Suppose that one hundred of our American Toastmasters Clubs would seriously undertake such a responsibility. One hundred Toastmasters Clubs, planted in a dozen or a score of foreign lands where there is at least a reasonable degree of freedom of speech, would be a powerful factor in spreading information and in crystallizing popular thought in the direction of peace and progress.

Second, in our own community, let us have an open meeting once a month, for the discussion of problems of the day, so that all who will may attend and enjoy a Toastmasters Club meeting, and see and feel the power of understanding at work. We can serve ourselves and our community at the same time in such a project.

America must lead. Toastmasters must help in leadership. It is our hour of opportunity. Are we able to meet the call of destiny?

General "Ike" as a Speaker

Congressman John Phillips, of California, offers this comment, apropos of General Eisenhower's visit in Washington:

"He made a fair speech—nothing outstanding. He had to read it, which cramped his style. Engineers and soldiers do not make the best speeches. They get things done. Congressmen make the speeches. Which do you consider the more important? Don't answer that question."

Club Bulletins

By JOSEPH C. MANN, Tyro Toastmasters Club of St. Louis
Lieutenant Governor of St. Louis Area of District 8.

CLUB Bulletins are a vital part of the Literature of Toastmasters. A well written Bulletin is at once a record of programs and achievements, an announcement of good things to come, a builder of membership, attendance and morale, and a sounding board for new ideas.

Editors deserve much more credit than is usually given them. Even though editing may be a hobby, it is time-consuming and usually must be done without contributions from the membership.

Advantages

Within the Club itself, the primary purpose may be to furnish each member with an up-to-the-minute history of activities—a record of progress and announcement of future events. It should serve as a stimulant to the absentees—a reminder that they were missed by the Club, and that they have passed up something worth while, too.

One of our Clubs used an attractive and catchy weekly leaflet as an important part of its recent successful membership drive.

There is an advantage, also, in mailing the Bulletin to the Club "graduates" — The Old Timers. You must keep them thinking of Toastmasters! True, many left because of increased business obligations, some because of lost interest, a few because they outgrew your Club. Don't overlook this gentle reminder to the "graduates," for they, too, are missing something vital.

It is certainly a Club obligation to keep the Service Men on the mailing list. They are coming home soon! And they will come back to your Club if you haven't forgotten them.

Exchanges

When exchanged with the other Clubs of your District and the Home Office, they accomplish two things. They cement the bond of unity in thought and ideals, and spread those interesting features which have so successfully stimulated your own Club. These things are accomplished because Bulletins are all carefully read and studied for useful and constructive ideas. Don't overlook for a moment the stimulation they give to the Educational and Program Committees of other Clubs. If you have achieved exceptional results in some endeavor, your idea will be tried, and those Committees will be on their toes to out-do your accomplishments.

It is through Club Bulletins that the Home Office of Toastmasters International has been able to pass on to the Club information about Old Timer's Night, Integrated Programs, Ladies' Night, Joint Meetings, Boss' Night, Speechcraft at $8.00 per registration, Parliamentary Procedure, Criticism with Variety, Summer Programs, and many other projects.

Identification

Unfortunately, the names of some Bulletins give no indication of their source. Look at the last copy of your Bulletin NOW! Does it have your official Club name, mailing address, city and date, besides the special name you have given it?

Omitting this information is like failing to sign a letter. The recipient cannot reply because he has no immediate identification of the sender. In almost every issue there is some feature which appeals to another Club. Without knowledge of your identity, those who are interested cannot readily secure further information about your successful programs.

Keep A File

Because the Bulletin constitutes the history of Club progress, maintain a permanent file of them with the minutes. In the years to come some Program Chairman will revive some of the programs that highlight the meetings of today.

The District Bulletin

Any District which does not now publish a bulletin should study the advantages of the "Governor's Message." In District Eight, for example, it is published regularly, and as its name applies, is a message from the Governor, containing as well, News of the Clubs, Council Notes and Activities, Progress in newly formed Clubs, New Charters, Problems and Announcements of District

Events. The News of the Clubs usually is a write-up of the outstanding features, programs and accomplishments during a given period, together with total membership and average attendance.

The District Bulletin is an added incentive to the Clubs to vie with one another in the achievement of the goal to which each Toastmaster is training his sights.

Possibilities

If your Club or District does not publish a bulletin, study the possibilities. Your Club and your District need one; the other Clubs and your District need the inspiration which your new ideas alone can give.

To obtain the services of an editor, you need do nothing more than is done when you need another speaker on your program. Ask him!

Dividends

The extra copies mailed to absentees, to old timers, to service men, to the Clubs of your District and to the Home Office will cost little in comparison to the dividends received in the development of new stimulants in your programs, and in the re-instatements of those who have withdrawn for one cause or another. The "pay-off" is tremendous if you will avail yourself of the opportunity to serve!

Editorial Note: Observe the quotations from various club bulletins on page 16 of this issue.

We Live in a Word World

WILLIAM H. CLAIRE, Beverly Hills, California

“IN the beginning was the word.” Or was it? That would depend entirely upon what premise we use to support our statement—whether metaphysically or biologically. I choose the biological premise because I visualize my ape-ancestor sitting beneath a tropical tree splitting coconuts with a rock. The rock was a tool to serve his physical needs. But I also hear him letting out a cry of rage because one of his neighbors was stealing his coconuts. As long as he could scream to scare away the thief the scream served to protect his sustenance. But when he could actually tell the pilferer that he would crack his skull with the rock if he did not quit stealing coconuts, he had a measure of control over his physical as well as his social environment.

His grunts were deep guttural sounds, which the emergency of his environment developed into meanings. Today we call these grunts words, and words are but the vocal sounds, or the combinations of sounds, used as a constituent unit of a sentence. No doubt the first language consisted of interjections and phonetic tones, which have developed into our common nouns.

Through the ages we find a power of perception developing the mind to a degree where intellect is capable of distinguishing between man and beast. And we find the animal-man born with two distinct talents—one to suckle and one for making sounds. After his vagitus he kept right on making sounds so long as they rendered him service. When the service was not rendered quickly enough he expanded his lungs and let out a lusty scream just as his forefathers did before him.

He had three distinct sounds which his mother's instinct could easily recognize—one for hunger; one for pain; one for contentment. As he grew older he learned to prattle, “Mamma” and “Dad-da.” By uttering these sounds he got more service. Later he learned that these service-sounds represented words, the meaning of which served his needs. Eventually he learned to combine words into sentences, and finally sentences into a language to serve his physical and social environment.

Since we are all endowed with the ability to make sounds which we can intelligently translate into words of meaning, it is self-evident that we must continually adjust ourselves to new words in order to enjoy the full benefits of our word-world. Without words we would have no civilization, and what we call civilization is largely a matter of words. As Carlyle so aptly put it, “The wise man is but a clever infant spelling letters from a hieroglyphic book, the lexicon of which lies in eternity.”

Success, however, does not mean that we have to have a large vocabulary. Far from it! The average man has only three thousand words that he can use effectively. But it does depend upon our selection of words — words that combine to make up the philosophy of our lives. Nothing helps us better to clarify our understanding of self, our natures, our powers and limitations than the fact that the expressive grunts we make through the power of words are indicative of our mode of life, because they express US! A man's language is an important part of his conduct. He should be held responsible for his words just as he is held responsible for his deeds, for both are the marks of character.

For after all, speaking is but the audible expression of thinking and thinking is but the inaudible expression of speaking. Words are the vehicle of thought. They are the symbols of ideas, while ideas are the mental images of thought.

The important thing, therefore, is to have ideas and thoughts fill our vocabulary with meaning. If we have the right motives and the right ideas we will find ourselves giving expression to our thoughts. Once we have found what we want to say we will find out how to say it. We will find ourselves putting the proper emphasis where it belongs because that is the way we want to express ourselves. “I have an idea it can be done” immediately puts ideas into words and action.

Have you ever championed a cause?

“A cause! A cause! My kingdom for a cause!” has prompted more people to get up on their feet than any other motive known to man. Champion a cause, be it none other than a movement to help yourself and others to be able to get up and talk, preparedly or impromptu, and you will delight in developing yourself and others into proficient speakers. And while you are championing your cause take to heart the aphorism of Joseph Conrad, who said, “He who wants to persuade should put his trust in the right word. Give me the right word and the right accent and I will move the world.”

I once saw this demonstrated while attending a lecture. The speaker was a tall, thin, homely man, whose hands almost touched his knees. He looked like a gangrel. His arms exaggerated his height. He reached the center of the rostrum in three long strides which caused the audience to snicker and finally burst out into insulting laughter. Any ordinary speaker no doubt would have felt embarrassed at such a reception, but not this man. He stood perfectly still until the audience had quieted down. When you could figuratively hear a pin drop, he calmly announced, “You are about to hear a lecture, not a lecturer.”

He moved the world! The audience gave him an uproarious round of applause which lasted several minutes. He had won their confidence, not with eloquent platform manners, but with the right word—sincerity. Just as quality is remembered long after price is forgotten, so will your listeners remember what you said and how you said it long after you have left the platform, if you have used the right word and the right accent.

What and how you speak are indices of the mind. They convey two important factors in personality development — ability and convincibility. This was forcibly brought to my attention by a successful salesman who was selling refrigerators. He used an elaborately illustrated brochure to depend upon pictures and the printed word. He said he based his philosophy on an old Chinese adage: "The eye remembers what the ear forgets." But one day he had to sell unseen values to the unseeing. Regretfully he lamented, "In all my life I was never so in need of my own words to describe my pro-

Toastmasters In A Prison Camp

LIEUTENANT BOB KING, of Los Angeles, used to attend the Southwest Toastmasters Club of that city, as a guest of his father, Elmer King, a member of the Southwest Club. He liked the idea, but as he was employed as a game warden at Arrowhead Springs, some distance from any Toastmasters Club, he could not become a member.

After more than three years of service, including a Bronze Star decoration, Lieutenant Bob was captured when Von Rundstedt broke through in the Ardennes last December. For nearly six months, he was in the hands of the Germans, at a place they called Oflag 13-B, which was no pleasure or health resort.

With characteristic resourcefulness, Bob King suggested that the men confined in this prison camp establish a Toastmasters Club product as I was that day. I could not refer to my brochure of pictures or show testimonials and, as you know blind people are more cautious than others I had to paint a complete word-picture. I don't mind confessing that I fell down miserably." But he proudly admitted that, "From that day on I learned to talk my product."

If it is true that—"In the beginning was the word" then it is also true that we must learn to translate words into thoughts and deeds and cash, for as one lexicographer said, "The right WORDS WILL WEDGE WALLETS WIDE open."

gram. He explained the idea, and it appealed. The result was "Oflag 13-B Toastmasters Club." It was a life-saver for the bored and disgusted Americans, and it was a morale builder of the first quality.

In the annals of the club's meetings, which Lieutenant King managed to bring home with him, there are listed many interesting incidents and speech topics. In the minutes of the meeting of February 6, this item appears: "The first speaker was Major Dodge, who spoke on 'Care and operation of the Serbian Stove.'"

Other subjects of speakers at various meetings, held regularly until an American bombing raid forced the postponement of one, included "How to Enjoy a Cup of Coffee;" "What I Shall Do When I First Debark in the U. S.;" "How I would run a German P. of W. Camp in the United States."

Absolutely---No!

By RALPH C. SMEDLEY

THERE are no "absolutes" in public speaking.

There are rules about speech, but every rule has exceptions. No rule can be invoked universally, infallibly, eternally.

Some critics make the mistake of trying to reduce every speech to a certain form. They would pour all speeches into the same mold—dress all thoughts in the one fashion. It can't be done.

Says one critic: "You put your hands in your pockets, and a speaker must never do that."

Says another: "You had your coat unbuttoned, and a coat must always be buttoned when you speak."

Other critics say other things, profoundly laying down rules as universal, or absolute, when there is no such thing as an absolute, unchangeable rule. Some critics mistake their own personal preferences or dislikes for fundamentals, and waste time in protesting against things which are harmless, and even desirable.

There are times when a speaker may properly pocket his hands, or bend at the waist, or shuffle his feet, or do many other things which are supposed to be not good usage. The question for the critic is not, "Did the speaker violate one of my pet rules?" but rather, "Did the actions of the speaker help or hinder the effect of his speech?"

If there is one "absolute" rule of speech—one "universal" principle, it is this:

The reason for making a speech is to accomplish a purpose. The tests to be applied to every speech are these: Did the speaker have in mind a definite purpose? Did he accomplish it? Did he make the sale? Did he convince his audience?

If there is, a purpose and it is clearly accomplished, the speech is a good one, whatever elementary principles the speaker violates. Effectiveness and good taste must always be the tests for posture, gesture and language.

It is a waste of time for the critic to try to find special "rules" for the various activities of the speaker. The effective speaker adapts the rules to suit the occasion, on the basis that anything which helps put his speech over is good, and anything which hinders is bad.

There is no code of absolute rules which prescribes how to hold the hands, how to use the gavel, how to address the meeting, or how to do anything else. The time, the place and the circumstances must always be considered.

Don't be distressed, then, if some critic dresses you down for using some word or gesture which he does not like. There may be others in your audience who like it. Try to get a variety of opinions before you make up your mind.

The true test of a speech is in the reaction of the whole audience, not of a single evaluator.

Shades of Beveridge, Harrison, Fairbanks, Willkie and Marshall must have hovered around the tables when the charter was presented to the new Eli Lilly Toastmasters Club of Indianapolis. Honorable Ralph F. Gates, Governor of Indiana, made the presentation. In the picture, Governor Gates is seen at the left, handing the charter to H. O. Johnson, President of the new Club, with Homer Eichacker, District Governor of District 11, at the right.

The Record of Growth

Rounding out our banner year in extension through new clubs, for a grand total of 54 new charters granted between July 1, 1944 and June 30, 1945, the following are added to the roster of Toastmasters International:

- 322—Los Caballeros Toastmasters Club of Santa Monica, California.
- 323—Bonners Ferry Toastmasters Club of Bonners Ferry, Idaho.
- 324—Nampa Toastmasters Club of Nampa, Idaho.
- 325—Yusef-Khan Grotto Toastmasters Club of Akron, Ohio.
- 326—William H. Barrett Toastmasters Club of Augusta, Georgia.

Since July 1, the following applications have been received:

- 327—Silver Lake Toastmasters Club of Los Angeles, California.
- 328—Wilshire Toastmasters Club of Los Angeles, California.

How To Introduce A Speaker

THERE are few fixed, hard-and-fast rules for the introduction of a speaker. The two or three essentials are like this:

1. The Toastmaster magnifies the speaker, and then removes himself from the picture.
2. The Toastmaster provides a springboard from which the speaker is launched into his speech under most favorable conditions.
3. The Toastmaster's task requires tact, courtesy, good taste, and the quality of self-effacement.

The physical aspects of introduction include:

1. Arrangement to give the speaker space. Don't "fence him in" with tables and chairs. Clear the center of the stage or the table for him. Give him room to move around.
2. Arrangement of the Toastmaster's chair so that he gets to it, after the introduction, without passing in front of the speaker, or causing any confusion. His seat should be at the side, and a little back of the speaker, if possible.

The formality of the introduction is this:

Give the speaker such build-up as is desirable, not so flattering or derogatory as to be embarrassing. Announce his subject clearly, so that all may understand it, and put a note of pleased expectancy into your voice. Give the speaker's name at the last, always saying it so that a stranger may understand it. Then turn toward the speaker, wait for him to rise and take his place. You may give him a welcoming gesture with the hand, or merely bow slightly in his direction. It is not necessary for you to repeat his name after he says "Mr. Toastmaster," although that is all right if you wish to do so. The words will probably be lost in the applause anyhow. It is important to remain standing until the speaker has reached the speaking position.

Here is a good, ordinary sort of speech of introduction, used by a Toastmaster not long ago. It is not a model of eloquence, but in its simplicity and brevity, it may serve as a good example:

"I suppose that everyone of us has hoped that the present World War might be the last great conflict we shall ever see. We do not like war and we do not want to fight. We would like to live at peace. But some students of world affairs are less hopeful about it. Mr. Jones, who is now to address us, is frankly pessimistic about it. I base my claim that he is a pessimist on the subject which he has chosen for his speech. He is going to talk to us about "The Next War." I wish he would tell us that there is not going to be any "next war," but whatever he may say, I am glad to present to you Mr. John W. Jones."

As he spoke the final words, the Toastmaster turned toward Mr. Jones in a friendly and welcoming manner, and stepped back out of the way. Mr. Jones began with "Mr. Toastmaster and gentlemen —" and the Toastmaster bowed slightly, retired unobtrusively to his chair, and sat down.

A good introduction can be handled in various ways, but so long as tact, courtesy and good taste prevail, the way is likely to be a good one.

Personalities in Toastmasters

Taylor-Made Magic

Mervin A. Taylor has been for years a member of the Southwest Toastmasters Club (No. 44) of Los Angeles. In 1944 he was president of the club. He taught in the Los Angeles schools for 15 years. And then he turned his attention to magic. For a good while he has been devising apparatus and performing "tricks" for his own amusement. His products attracted attention from other magicians, and the demand for his work grew until now he is devoting his time and attention to the manufacture of apparatus for sleight of hand performers.

In the June issue of "Genii," the monthly publication of the Pacific Coast Association of Magicians, Merv Taylor was featured in a most interesting article, while his picture was the principal decoration of the magazine cover. The article states that "To thousands of magicians throughout the country the name of Merv Taylor is synonymous with 'superior apparatus.' It is certain that Taylor-made magic ranks with the very best that has ever been produced."

Toastmasters who attended the Convention at Santa Cruz in 1941 will remember how Merv entertained them with his "Notimcritolixer" device, a mechanism for automatic evaluation of speeches.

Ruby of Louisville

Earl Ruby, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and a member of the Louisville Toastmasters Club, was honored by the newspapermen of America at the recent meeting in Atlantic City, when Sports Columnist Ruby was awarded the coveted "Headliners" medal as evidence that he has had the most consistently good sports column of the year. He was one of 15 men honored by the National Headliners Club for outstanding achievement in journalism during the past year. It was stated that his handling of servicemen's correspondence in his column was a determining factor in the award.

Earl Ruby always takes time to respond to any request from correspondents in the service, and to find answers to their questions about sports, submitted from all over the world. Louisville Toastmasters are proud of this recognition given to one of their own number.

Psychological Preparation for Speech

MUCH of the success of a speech depends on the psychological preparation of the speaker—his state of mind as he gets ready to talk.

If he says to himself, "I have to make a speech next week, and gosh! how I dread it! I know I'll make a fool of myself and a failure of the speech," he is quite likely to fulfill his gloomy predictions. That sort of suggestion prepares him for failure.

A far better way is for him to say to himself, "I'm going to talk to the men next week, and I have something pretty good to tell them. In fact, they ought to hear what I am going to say. I know more about it than they do, and I am going to have a mighty good time proving it to them. It interests me, and I'll bet I can make it interesting to the others."

The speaker who anticipates his speech with pleasure has a better chance to give pleasure to his audience. If he hates the assignment, his hatred will communicate itself in spite of him.

As a rule, the speaker carries around two gremlins who talk to him while he gets ready to speak. On one shoulder there is a little blue devil who chants, "You can't make a speech. You know you can't make a speech. You're a fool to try it. Give it up now. You are bound to fail."

On the other shoulder is another and more friendly imp who tries to make himself heard. He says: "Of course you can talk to the crowd. This is good stuff you have in mind. I think you are going to get away with it all right, and it will be a lot of fun. Sure you can make a good speech. Just let yourself go."

The wise speaker listens to the optimistic gremlin and presently he begins to enjoy the prospect of facing the audience. He pictures himself, in his mind, as making a fine talk, holding close attention, stirring the crowd to applause, and winning favorable comments from his critic.

As the time approaches when he is to be heard, his enthusiasm for his subject grows, and his desire to impart information becomes almost an obsession. He is like the race horse, champing the bit and pulling at the reins. When he is announced, he is on his feet all fired with enthusiasm, and he goes to work with pleasure to tell the fellows all about it. He has a good time, and so do they.

We usually get just about what we train ourselves to expect. The good old principle of auto-suggestion works for the speaker as for everyone else. Expect to fail, and you'll do it. Anticipate success, and work to deserve it, and you will succeed. The whole thing is in your mind.

Try suggesting to yourself success, ease, fluency, grace, eloquence and the other elements of good speech, instead of dread and failure and fear and forgetting.

Unusual!!

NOT many Toastmasters clubs can offer such entertainment on charter night as was served up for the Los Caballeros Toastmasters of Santa Monica (Charter No. 322) when they received their charter recently. Present and participating in the program were Leo Carrillo, well known star of screen and radio, and Ferde Grofe, orchestra conductor and composer.

A twenty-minute talk by Leo Carrillo was filled with pointed suggestions on speech, brightened up with his wit and humor. Ferde Grofe told how he happened to compose the "Grand Canyon Suite" and then played selections from it. Hon. Leland M. Ford, recently Member of Congress from Los Angeles, paid tribute to the great work our clubs are doing. Everett W. Morgan, a member of the Santa Monica Toastmasters Club Number 21, and a remarkable amateur magician, made his contribution to the entertainment. All four of these notables have been made honorary members of Los Caballeros Toastmasters, and have expressed their purpose to attend.

For the benefit of tenderfeet let it be said that Los Caballeros is pronounced "Los (with the long sound of the O) Cabalyairos" (with accent on the "yair.")

C. I. M.

Serving a group of high grade men at the California Institute for Men near Pomona is the Institute "Speakers' Club," sponsored and supervised by Pomona Toastmasters Club. In this remarkable institution for correction of the erring, training in speech is proving to be an instrument of highest value in promoting clear thinking, in helping to readjust personalities, and in preparing men to return to their normal places in the world. The Toastmasters program and methods appear to be just what is needed.

Men of Vision

A Toastmasters Club which really deserves the adjective "unique" is being formed in Los Angeles among men who have lost their sight. This chapter is sponsored by the Toastmasters Club of Alhambra, No. 34, whose members have been hard at work helping the sightless men to get to meetings and giving them an understanding of the methods of the Toastmasters Club. The men have put a considerable amount of material into Braille in order that they may read it, and they are learning how to operate in spite of their handicaps. It is expected that they will be ready by September to be chartered as a regular chapter, and it is hoped that a new means of service may be discovered in this work for men who are prevented by lack of sight from participating in many of the usual activities of men.

The Toastmasters Club of Alhambra has been helping with the organization of a Toastmasters Club for a group of men in Los Angeles, who have lost their sight. Difficulties in transportation and other handicaps resulting from lack of sight are handicapping the work, but it is definitely in progress. Pictured at a recent meeting of the group are, left to right: M. X. Dahlstrom, President of Alhambra Toastmasters; Bob Anderson, organizer of the new group; Al Stolliker, Deputy Governor of Alhambra Toastmasters; and Jack Felthouse, a member of the new group, who is at present a law student. Bob Anderson has been active in promoting work among the blind, and he is at present world's champion blind bowler.

The War Machine

War is a machine going in the wrong direction. It may be necessary. It may be inevitable, and we as riders may have no choice but to mount it. War may be right and good,—like the Second World War—and lead through high though obscure purposes to ultimate human triumph. But war is still a machine going in the wrong direction, and if you as a human being ride on it long enough, and see enough of society and mankind's affairs from the point of view of the war machine, then you will get off the machine a reactionary.

Clipped

Quotable Paragraphs from Club Bulletins

From "The Speakeasy," Greensburg, Pa.

Come to think of it, fellows, we really have the tools to build up our club. Let's take stock: What do we have to offer a guest that would make him want to join our club? First, he receives a hearty welcome and is made to feel at home. Second, he enjoys the friendly, democratic atmosphere of Table Topics during a pleasant meal. Third, he gets a ringside seat on Parliamentary Procedure. Fourth, he hears four entertaining and educational speeches delivered by his fellow men, who are introduced by a clever Toastmaster. Fifth, he listens to constructive criticism by four individual critics, with a general straightening out by the General Critic. Now let's be honest, fellows. Where else could you find so much to offer a guest, and for so small cost?

From "The Toaster News,"
East Liverpool, Ohio

Letter to the editor, signed "A Regular Attender."

There is not one of us who can truthfully say, "I have nothing more to learn along the lines of speechcraft." We have all listened to too many errors in preparation, delivery, grammar and the like to believe that. But how can we gain experience or knowledge by staying away from meetings? The same high ideal that caused us to join the club should motivate our attendance. It is significant that our best speakers are our most loyal attenders.

From "Southern Accent," Atlanta Toastmasters Club.

The writer believes that we should get our new members on their feet as soon as possible. They join us only to better themselves in public speaking, so let's give them the right start by putting them on the program and on their feet soon.

Never let this happen to you! The speaker was eloquent. He had a talent for choosing the happy phrase; he had wit; he was cultured and informed. He commanded the attention of every member of his audience; his words had the ring of sincerity. BUT — he talked too long!

From "The Speechmaster," Ventura, California

We like the suggestion that all Toastmasters, like the football subs, be ready to dash into the game on short notice. Every member should have a speech in mind, ready to use when needed. If we are to acquire skill in presenting our thoughts, there can be no better practice than talking from mental notes, prepared in advance, and saying what we think while, on our feet. Practice, practice, and more practice is our idea of attaining proficiency in any human effort.

From "The Zanesville Toastmaster," Zanesville, Ohio

Design for a Successful Speech: Every successful speech must be cast in a form which fits the habit and thought of your listener. There is an excellent formula which explains this and is based upon the mental habits of human beings. The formula has four steps:

1. Catch the attention of the listener.
2. Having caught attention, convince him that the matter under discussion concerns him, otherwise his interest will wane.
3. Having secured his attention and made him believe that he is concerned, get down to cases and show him that you have not misled him, by bringing forward such facts, ideas, or emotions as will fit his interest.
4. Finally, leave him with the conviction that his attention has not been in vain. Do this by suggesting some course of action or attitude of mind derived from, and justified by, what you have shown him.

For example, a politician might

Verbosity

The quiet man in the crowd had grown tired of the boastful talk of the others. So, when there was a lull in the conversation, he began: "This morning I went over to see a new machine we have at our place, and it's astonishing how it works."

"And how does it work?" asked one.

"Well," was the reply, "by means of a pedal attachment, a fulcrum lever converts a vertical reciprocal motion into a circular movement. The principal part of the machine is a huge disc that revolves in a vertical plane. Power is applied through the axis of the disc, and work is done on the periphery, where the hardest steel by mere impact may be reduced to any shape."

"What is this wonderful machine?" chorused the crowd.

"A grindstone," was the reply.

—Tit-Bits.

Verbal Pitfalls

THERE are many pairs of words which become confused in our minds, by reason of similarity in sound, and thus are improperly used. In some cases the trouble results from faulty enunciation, while in others it is a mistake as to meaning. All the words are worth having under control, for use. Here are some examples:

Crevice, (pronounced CREVice) means a small crack.

Crevasse, (crev AS) refers to a deep crack or fissure, as in glacial ice, or a breach in a levee.

Accelerate, (ak SEL er ate) means to speed up.

Exhilarate, (eg ZIL a rate) means to stimulate, enliven, cheer up.

Fiscal, (FIS kal) refers to financial matters, and must be carefully distinguished from Physical, (Fiz i kal) which relates to material things. Fiscal and physical are not so likely to be confused as to meaning, but careless enunciation mixes them up.

Minister and Minster are two other words mixed in pronunciation. A minister is one who ministers, as a clergyman, while minster is a word for "church," derived from the same source as "monastery," and is usually found in combination with some other name, as "Westminster," and "Axminster." It would be a pity for you to allow yourself to speak of "Westminister Abbey."

Ordinance, meaning a law or rule, should be carefully distinguished from Ordnance, which is heavy artillery or military supplies. One letter makes the difference.

"Haled" into court is a correct expression, but "hailed into court" is the wrong spelling, although the two words are pronounced alike. It is interesting to note that we have four "hail" words in English, all pronounced exactly alike, but coming from four different sources. "Hail" may mean frozen rain or a hearty greeting. "Hale" may mean robust or hearty, and it may also mean to drag by violence.

Airplane and aeroplane are two words which cause confusion. Say "airplane" and be safe. Leave out the "o". It carries over from the French, and is almost invariably mispronounced in America. Whatever you say, don't call it "areo-plane."

Bouillon (boo YON) is the French name for clear soup. Bullion is our word for uncoined gold or silver. Both these words come from the same source, the French bouillir, meaning to boil.

Transit and transient look alike and sound somewhat alike, but they don't mean the same. Transit means the act of crossing, such as the transit of Mercury across the face of the sun. It has also come to refer to the act of transportation, so that we may have a "rapid transit system." Transient is an adjective, meaning fleeting, hasty, passing quickly. We often speak of "transients" in the sense of migrants, or persons staying for but a short time, as opposed to permanent residents.

THREE HEADS BETTER THAN ONE

Toastmasters of San Diego have had an unusual experience with leadership during the past year. In the San Diego Toastmasters Club are three men who stand high in the organization. In the picture you will observe Robert M. Switzler, President of Toastmasters International, in conference with James Noel, Governor of District Five, and J. Clark Chamberlain, the First President of Toastmasters International. Conceding that other clubs may have a President and a District Governor as members at the same time, the San Diego Toastmasters maintain that no other club can match its possession of the very first President of the organization as an active and highly-valuable member.

One Way To Improve

I'm reminded (by the confusion of our thinking) of a friend I had in the old days. He was a little bit scrambled inside, and he tried very hard to cure himself. I met him one time and asked how was he? Did he still shout at people? "Well-yea," he said. Then he added quickly, "But I'm a lot better."

"You say you're still shouting at people," I said. "Yes, I know," he replied, "but you see I've started shouting at the right people."

—Robert Ardrey, in "Worlds Beginning."

Constructing a Speech

DID you ever watch a grocery clerk placing canned goods on shelves? Or have you watched your wife or mother putting away the jellies and preserves in the pantry?

Did you observe how in each case the worker was careful to get all the cans and jars of one kind on the same shelf? Did you notice that sometimes a jar was overlooked, so that he had to come down and correct the omission by returning it to the right shelf?

Arranging a speech is much the same sort of process. It is a matter of putting things where they belong, and doing it the first time.

Each item in the speech belongs in a certain place, in connection with the point considered. If handled in proper order, it fits into the picture with good effect. If left out, it must either be brought in out of turn, or altogether forgotten. To get everything in its place takes planning.

You have listened to a speaker who kept forgetting to put things where they belonged. He had a whole shelf filled with canned corn, let us say, and went on to the shelf for canned tomatoes. Then he found in some corner of his mind three or four cans of corn he had misplaced, so he had to go back and try to fit them in. You didn't mind it the first time, but after two or three rearrangements, you were discouraged. After he had climbed his step ladder to the higher shelves of the pantry, and then had to come down to the floor to pick up a can he had missed, you resented it. You wanted him to stack all the cans on the right shelves at the right time.

To build a successful speech, fill up the shelves as they come, and if you overlook something, toss it out the window, rather than climb down to pick it up. Get all the cans on the right shelves, and don't leave any to be kicked around later.

Surprised

Knute Rockne, of football fame, was once seated on an elevated table at a banquet given in his honor. Called on to speak, he surveyed the guests at the lower tables: "I feel like the intoxicated gentleman in the park. He looked into the lagoon and, saucer-eyed with astonishment, turned to an officer and asked, 'Is that the moon down there?' The officer opined that it was. 'Gosh!' mused the toper, 'I wonder how I ever got 'way up here!'" —Facts.

SPEECH PREPARATION

When do you prepare your speeches?

We asked several experienced Toastmasters this question, and here are some replies:

"I make my best preparation when my hands are busy at something which does not require careful thought. I seem to think better when my hands are occupied, so I prepare speeches while pushing the lawn mower."

"After I go to bed at night, while waiting for sleep to come, is my best time for arranging my thoughts. I have collected my facts, now I put them together. It often puts me to sleep. I hope my speeches do not stupefy my audience."

"When I have a speech to prepare, I get my books together, hunt my easy chair, and turn on soft music—a symphony program, if one is available. Then I construct my argument and plan my eloquence."

"When do I prepare my speeches? Who? Me? Man, that's a laugh. I don't have to prepare. I just get up and open my mouth, and the words come. Thoughts? You don't need many thoughts if you use plenty of words."

"and I wish to thank you for permitting me to address this group tonight"

Reminders

About Toastmasters Jewelry

Toastmasters emblems are manufactured and sold by J. A. Meyers & Company, 1031 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, California. Orders for Members' Lapel Buttons, Past Presidents' Emblems and Past District Governors' Emblems should be sent directly to the Company, not to Toastmasters International. These three items are available in spite of war shortages. When the restrictions are removed, the Meyers Company will once again carry a full line of emblems and trophies.

About Educational Supplies

The purpose of the Educational Bureau is to provide for each individual Toastmaster the aids to better speech which he will use. Any member of a Toastmasters Club may ask and receive, free of charge, Basic Training, The Amateur Chairman, or Speech Evaluation, provided he makes the request individually, indicating the club to which he belongs. Otherwise, a charge is made.

About Speechcraft

Speechcraft is a course of eight lessons in speech fundamentals, designed to be presented by the members of a club as instruction for new members and a refresher course for the older ones. It should not be ordered for individual use. It is sold for 75 cents a copy to clubs desiring to use it to build up membership and to improve the quality of programs.

About New Members

When the new member is inducted into the club, he receives the "Greetings to New Members" packet, which the club secretary keeps at hand at all times. This is furnished free on request, to the secretary. As soon as the new member is inducted, the club secretary reports him to the Home Office. Promptly, a copy of Basic Training is mailed to the new member. In this book is a card on which he may order Speech Evaluation free of charge. When he receives his Speech Evaluation, he will find in it a card on which he may ask for The Amateur Chairman, also free of charge. All he has to do is to ask. But he must ask, individually, in order to receive.

Addressing Mail

The Home Office of Toastmasters International is now located in larger and more convenient quarters at 227 North Broadway, Santa Ana, California. It is not necessary to use a street address on mail sent here. Simply address Toastmasters International, Santa Ana, California, and it will suffice. The mail is received in P. O. Box 714, and it helps if that number is placed on the envelope. Also it helps, and greatly, if correspondents will indicate their own addresses, either on the envelope or on the letter. Postal zone numbers are desirable.

THE ORATOR MUST BE A GOOD MAN

Marcus Fabius Quintilian (Died about 95 A. D.)

Let the orator, then, whom I propose to form, be such a one as is characterized by the definition of Marcus Cato, A GOOD MAN SKILLED IN SPEAKING.

It is of importance that an orator should be good, because, should the power of speaking be a support to evil, nothing would be more pernicious than eloquence alike to public concerns and private, and I myself, who, so far as is in my power, strive to contribute something to the faculty of the orator, should deserve very ill of the world, since I should furnish arms, not for soldiers, but for robbers . . . . .

My judgment carries me still further; for I not only say that he who would answer my idea of an orator must be a good man, but that no man, unless he be good, can ever be an orator.
