Great Opportunities

HARRY W. MATTISON

"You have one of the great opportunities of history." These were the concluding words in Willkie's message to Governor Dewey, congratulating him on his nomination for the presidency. No one knows how the public will interpret "great opportunities", for the words are capable of reflecting one's own self, depending upon his immediate point of view.

However, it is fair to expect Mister America to want them to mean the great opportunity to do good for America and for the world. In Toastmasters, opportunities are not fraught with uncertainties; nor limited by era, measure, location and duration; for we deal with the fundamental urge in man: To improve!

Here we learn that in helping the other fellow to improve, we automatically improve ourselves. Our motto might well be in the words of J. T. Trowbridge:

"Not in rewards, but in the strength to strive,
The blessing lies."

Many men attend service clubs as mere dues-paying members, leaving the real activities to be carried on by officers and leaders, to whom go the larger opportunities. But in a Toastmasters Club, each man is expected to do something at each meeting. The novice soon ceases to be a follower. He assumes leadership. He is off to a new start. Ahead lie opportunities beyond estimate.

A Toastmasters Club is not simply a service club. It serves the other service clubs. In return for small effort and nominal expense, it gives men the proved means for self-improvement. It develops potential leaders. In turn, they raise the standards of community performance. Then, as communities are the backbone of the nation, it follows that the standards of national performance will be raised; and as our scope broadens to other lands, even standards of international performance will be brought higher.

To Toastmasters, great opportunities are progressive and perpetual.

Let Oscar Do It

WALTER J. FERRIS, Smedley Chapter Number One

Seneca, the great Roman stoic and philosopher, knew the value of a well-ordered speech when he wrote that thought-provoking line, "Speech is the index of the mind."

Every speech made in your Toastmasters Club is an index to the manner in which the speaker's mind was functioning.

When so many of us admit that many of our speeches are a sort of hodge-podge of thoughts strung together in some uncertain way which even we ourselves do not recognize, then we must confess that we have not yet arrived at the goal of effective speaking.

The chance remark, "I wish I knew an easy formula for preparing a speech", started a train of thoughts in my mind, and then—there in the middle of the night, the train stopped, and who should step off but—OSCAR!

Oscar indicated his willingness to help Toastmasters attain outstanding performance. He really wants to have a hand in it, so that every man may have a simple method at his very finger tips, ready to help at any time and on all occasions.

Five Points

Here is Oscar's plan in tabloid form. You can spread it on your fingers. Use your left hand, so as to keep the right hand free for gestures.

On your thumb, write "O" for the opening. "Open right."

On the first finger, "S" reminds you to "state the need."

On the second finger, "C" suggests "changes offered," or "chance for improvement."

On the third finger, "A" stands for "audience, to see and understand."

On the fourth finger, "R" reminds you of the "reaction, or response" from the audience.

Put it into greater detail. Generalize on the plan, and you will have something like this:

- O—pening, exactly right;
Studied, forceful, never trite.
- S—tate the need, the right or wrong;
Illustrate, and make it strong.
- C—hanges offer, which satisfy;
Solve the problem, then exemplify.
- A—udience must clearly see
How beneficial your plan will be.
- R—esponse now seek, create satisfaction;
Reiterate, or appeal for action.

These five points are not just pegs to hang a speech on, but are five separate and progressive steps in logical sequence which are to be used in the preparation and planning of your speech. Under these headings you will be able to assemble all of your facts, stories, illustrations and arguments, and to know just where you can most effectively place them; just where they belong.

Since each section has a specific purpose to accomplish, you can adjust them to the various lengths which time requires. You will observe that your thumb and four fingers form a complete unit, which you cannot easily mix up, since nature has arranged them in order. Thus, if you follow the arrangement of your fingers, your speech will have order and unity.

Every speech must be put into some sort of form, good or bad, before you deliver it. If careful, you will assemble your material, select that which will best suit your purposes, and then let "OSCAR" help you arrange it.

The Opening

Remember: "Opening exactly right; studied, forceful, never trite."

Your actions as you rise to speak should reflect poise and self-control. Do not start to speak until any noise or confusion in the room is silenced or subdued. Your audience should hear your first word.

Walter J. Ferris is the "dean" of the Number One Toastmasters Club. He is the only charter member now active in the club, after twenty years, with the exception of Ralph Smedley. This article is the result of a study made by Mr. Ferris in connection with the "Speechcraft" course. He sought to interpret the Monroe "Motivated Sequence" into a practical and simple form for the average member. His "Oscar" is the result. Those who have used this formula for planning and remembering a speech have found it good.

Poise is a by-product of careful preparation. When you know that you are well prepared, you gain added confidence in yourself. Be sure that you have thorough knowledge of your subject and of the sequence in which it is to be presented.

Your opening words should be studied with care. Plan the first sentence to keynote the speech and to fit in with the close. You may use a quotation, a human interest story, an object lesson, a shocking statement, or something else, but be prepared with it.

Do not drag in something just to catch attention. You will lose the interest the instant you let down. Make the statement or story definitely a part of the opening and of the speech.

In some types, such as scientific, medical, mechanical, business or legal, the opening may be a statement of fact, but not a dull statement. Give it life and interest. Make the opening forceful. You believe that what you are to say is worth saying. Let them know it by the way you say it. Speak with conviction.

Never start your speech with a trite phrase. Do not apologize. Do not tell the audience you are not prepared. That is the same as telling them that they don't amount to much, so you did not bother to prepare.

Remember, this is just your opening. Don't use all your time in getting started. Use just enough to gain favorable attention and keynote your speech.

Do not start with a bang, and then fizzle out. Set a pace that you can vary to suit the need. Have a proper transitional phrase to carry the thought adroitly to the second phase of the talk.

The Need

Remember: "State the need, the right or wrong; Illustrate and make it strong."

Something is needed. State the need in a way that will impress every auditor. Illustrate and show how it affects them. Some procedure, method or practice apparently is right and in good form, but you believe that you have a still better way. Explain the existing situation, and give examples. Hold the remedy for the next step.

You believe that a condition in some phase of life is wrong. Show what it is and prove it. Do not undertake too much. Take the most important part and give it life and vigor.

It is good practice to mention the illustrations or results first, and then follow them with the statement of the cause. This helps to maintain suspense.

This part of the talk is the easiest. It is easy to show what is wrong or to state simple facts, but to make your message ring, you must show the remedy for the wrong. That comes next.

The Satisfaction

Remember: "Changes offer which satisfy; Solve the problem, then exemplify."

You are now ready to propose the changes which you believe will meet the needs presented in the preceding section.

In an informative talk, you carry on from the general statement to the details you are to present. In a speech of protest, or a "problem" speech, you will have laid out the problem in the second section. The solution follows naturally.

Make no apology for your solution. It is your answer to the problem. No one else may have thought of it. Make your statements simple, word pictures which will stick in memory. Use statistics sparingly, unless it is a technical treatise. Use sketches, charts or pictures if they will make the point more clear. Develop the speech so as to appeal to the audience through all five senses, if possible.

Study your presentation so as to make the most important items stand out prominently. Propose the remedy or the changes you advocate, and then turn your thought to the effect upon the people you address.

The Audience Must See

Remember: "Audience must clearly see how beneficial your plan will be."

It is not enough to offer a plan of action or to state that the change is a good one. You must make the audience see just how it will benefit them. They must see themselves enjoying, experiencing, having a part in the changed procedure on the new idea. Give vivid descriptions of the way it will affect them or their children or the world in which they live if they accept or reject the proposal you have made.

Show how little it will cost in comparison with what they will get, how easily they can pay for it, or how it will profit them.

Save the appeal for action until you have shown them the benefits, and then you will be ready to go after them for the desired response.

And Now, the Results

Remember: "Response now seek, create satisfaction; Reiterate or appeal for action."

You cannot expect the audience to accept your plan unless you ask them to. Therefore, tell them exactly what you want. Have a definite procedure in mind for them to follow. Explain what they are to do, where to go, when, and how? In a word, make the sale.

Sum up the benefits. Create a sense of satisfaction within them over what they have heard from you, or have accomplished for themselves. Appeal for action.

Pour into this appeal all the force you are capable of using. Appeal through all the five senses, through reason and emotion, if necessary. Make it strong.

Do not wait until you are on your feet before you prepare the close. You know you will need it. Have it ready. "Make your chart before you start."

Your closing words are the ones they are most likely to remember. Choose them with care and deliver them with power and persuasiveness.

Always tie the close in with the opening or keynote of the speech.

Let Oscar help in your preparation. Then, so speak that your words will create pictures for your hearers—pictures to be hung in the galleries of their minds, to be remembered long after your speech has ended. Then they will be satisfied that they have listened to a speech which is "the index of a well ordered mind."

A BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE

Brand Whitlock, in his "Forty Years Of It," tells of conducting Colonel James McKenzie, of Kentucky, through the Lincoln Monument at Springfield. Colonel McKenzie, while a former officer in the Confederate Army, was an ardent admirer of Lincoln, and he visited the tomb as a national shrine.

The custodian gave the usual lecture on the exhibits and the relics shown, and guided his visitors throughout the structure. As they left, Colonel McKenzie paused to shake hands with the custodian, and said to him: "Captain, I wish to express my appreciation of the privilege I have had this morning of paying my respects at the shrine of the greatest American that ever lived." And then, still holding the old fellow's hand, he added with profound gravity: "And I cannot go away without expressing my sense of satisfaction in the eloquent oration you have delivered on this occasion. I was particularly impressed, sir, by its evident lack of previous thought and preparation."

To the Ladies

A. L. AEILS, Seattle Downton Toastmasters Club

WHEN this subject was assigned to me, I protested that a bachelor, being a real "ladies' man", would be better qualified to treat it. But after further study, it occurred to me that no one could be better qualified to discuss the ladies than one who lives with a lady. And so, throwing caution to the winds, I delved into the ramifications of this dangerous theme. The poet must have had men like me in mind when he wrote: "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread."

It appears that woman's first home was in the Garden of Eden. According to the Bible, Adam was placed in profound sleep, and from his side was taken a rib, from which woman was created. She became his wife. Evil minded persons remind us that thus man's first sleep became his last repose. But let it be remembered that if woman is sometimes contrary with a perversity of mind which passeth understanding, she was made from the crookedest part of man.

Some people have a different story about creation. They go back to the time when we were all of us monkeys. They maintain that man originally had a tail, and that in process of evolution, woman was made from the tail. You may scoff, but force is given to this theory by the fact that even to the present day, man is often inclined to leave his wife behind.

This rather difficult subject was cleverly treated by Al Aeils, Past President of Seattle Downtown Toastmasters Club, on the occasion of a recent Ladies' Night in the Club. His speech is given here as a suggestion to other speakers who may have occasion to pay tribute to the fair guests.

Even in the Garden of Eden it seems that woman had her troubles. Eve raised Cain, Cain raised a club, and with it he killed her favorite son. From that day to this, woman has had an aversion to clubs. Of course the Toastmasters Club is an exception.

As the ages rolled on, woman elevated herself in the scale of life. She stops at nothing. She demands, she soars, she conquers. She delves into the most abstruse problems of science. She tries to understand all mysteries. She can even figure out the exact minute when her husband should be home from a stag party.

Man's admiration for woman never flags. He will give her his name, his fortune, his whole heart. He will give her anything, in fact, except his seat on a crowded bus.

The dress of modern woman is a revelation to man. Only just yesterday I observed one of our Toastmasters eyeing a cute little corn-fed maiden as she tripped down the street. After watching her for a block or two, the Toastmaster turned and sadly dropped a quarter in a blind man's hat, out of sheer sympathy.

We cannot but admire the Mormons of tradition, who had several wives apiece. Modern man sometimes has several wives, too, but he has them in succession, not at the same time. He drives his team of wives tandem. The old-timer insisted on driving them abreast. So here's to the good old days, when a single death might mean a dozen widows.

Just the other day one of our bachelor members told me that he believes in divorces because they keep the women in circulation.

Seriously speaking, woman's character is far more noble than man's, probably due to her origin from the part nearest man's heart. Gentlemen, there's no question about it—woman is a mystery that man will never be able to solve, but he will never give her up.

ON LUCKIE STREET, ATLANTA

The Voice of Experience

An inquiry was received from Owensboro, Kentucky, concerning organization of Toastmasters Club in that city. For nearby assistance, the inquiry was referred to Ashland Toastmasters, our only present chapter in the Blue-grass State. A letter was written by Herbert R. Smith, charter president of the Ashland Club, which contains so much that is characteristic of the manner in which clubs are established that we are quoting several paragraphs, reflecting the impressions of a recent recruit to the Toastmasters movement. Mr. Smith writes in part:

"TO begin with, a group of us here in Ashland engaged a teacher to conduct classes in public speaking in the winter of 1941-42. We found the experience so helpful that after the classes were completed, we wondered if it might be possible to continue our meetings without formal instruction. However, you know how difficult it is to keep a group together unless they have a common aim and program.

"As we were discussing the matter, I read an article about the Toastmasters Clubs and discussed it with our class members. They liked the idea and so I—like you—wrote to Mr. Smedley for more information, and with the same materials which he has sent to you, we decided to start a club.

"With a nucleus of eight or ten from the public speaking class, we invited some of our friends, and without any trouble at all we soon had thirty active members. The group included a bank president, an oil company executive, a wholesale grocery executive, officials of the power company and other representative men of the community. In addition, there were men like myself who had a great need for the benefits which come from learning to speak before an audience.

"From the beginning we have had a successful group. In the last year a number of the original members have gone into the armed forces, or to better jobs in other communities. Their places have readily been filled with men who are proving to be as interested in the club and receptive to its benefits as were the original members.

"While I never expect to become really a public speaker, I have found the program of inestimable value to me in cases far afield from public speech or oratory. Therefore, for purely selfish reasons, I know of no other activity which pays better dividends.

"So far as Toastmasters is concerned, I can tell you that it is the very best plan for learning public speaking that I have seen. We think it is better for practical business men than a regular public speaking teacher. We follow the plans outlined by Toastmasters International and use their suggestions and ideas. By doing so we maintain high interest in the club, and receive individual benefits, as every member has the chance to be on his feet at every meeting.

"We enjoy a fellowship which I do not find in any other club. I am a service club member, and think a lot of the club, but Toastmasters has something more. We have members of the various service clubs in our membership, and it is our unanimous opinion that Toastmasters gives us more pleasure than any of the rest of them.

"If you organize such a club in your city, you will find that the members are all bound together with a common cause of sympathy in your endeavors. Perhaps that is one reason why we work so well together.

"It will be a pleasure to see another club in Kentucky, especially because we would like to share our enthusiasm with fellow-Kentuckians. Let us help you in every way possible."

TABLE TOPIC SUGGESTIONS

FOR impromptu discussion, the topic must have a point, quickly perceived and readily reached. It may be serious or funny, but it must be timely and of general interest. The speaker must be able to grasp the salient feature instantly, and thus to frame his remarks to reach a point by the most interesting path, and without delay.

Here are table topics selected from many club programs:

1. Will women stay at home after the war, or will they wish to continue as workers—wage-earners?
2. Should price controls be continued after the war?
3. Does America have a real foreign policy?
4. Is the protective tariff a dead issue?
5. Is some degree of censorship and regulation for press and radio desirable?
6. Should public schools be directed by the Federal Government, or by the States, or by local Boards of Education?
7. Do the public schools really teach American citizenship?
8. Shall we have compulsory military training after the war?
9. Are people growing more intelligent?
10. What is the best way to get $5,000 dishonestly?
11. Where shall I keep my personal airplane when I get it?
12. The most unforgettable character I ever knew.
13. Can traffic accidents be eliminated? Reduced?
14. Is the educated man happier than the uneducated one?
15. Why not drink intoxicating beverages?
16. Is home cooking really the best?
17. Can you read the newspaper and listen to the radio at the same time?
18. Should all citizens be fingerprinted?
19. How to talk on the telephone.
20. Is work good for us?
21. Is racial equality humanly possible?

Note: Remember—the purpose of the table topic is to get every member on his feet at every meeting, and to train him in impromptu discussion.

What About Words?

By THE LOGOMACHIST

Send in your questions about words and how to use them, and our experts will try to answer them.

Gladiolus

How should we pronounce the name of this splendid flower?

The word is Latin, the diminutive of gladius, a sword, so that it literally means "a little sword". The Latin pronunciation puts the accent on the "i", so that the genus name is pronounced "glad EYE o lus". However, that is much too fussy a pronunciation for Americans. The common pronunciation is "glad i O lus" and even the Webster Dictionary admits this to preferred place, reminding us that popular usage controls the dictionary rulings. Please don't call it "gladiola" or "gladiolia". Shorten it to "glad" if you like. And you may form the plural as "gladioluses" with the approval of the Dictionary. Too bad that such a fine flower has received such a troublesome name.

Adapt - Adopt

How can I distinguish between these two words? Is there any formula, any mnemonic, which will help?

First, get the meanings clearly in mind. The derivation may help. Adopt is from the Latin adoptare, meaning to exercise the right of choice. You might associate it with "option". Thus, for you to adopt an idea or a child may be optional with you. Adapt is from the Latin adaptare, to fit or adjust. The Latin aptus means fit or suitable. When we adapt something, we change it or adjust it in suitable form. Remind yourself of it by association with our common word "apt". Perhaps you should add "adept" to your list in this group. It is related to "adapt", coming from the Latin adeptus, which carries the sense of having achieved or arrived at success in some art, so that "adept" readily takes on the meaning of skilled, proficient, expert.

Specie - Species

What is the difference between these two words, aside from the fact that one of them ends in the letter "s"?

The two words are from the same Latin source, species, a certain kind. You might refer to the article on "The 'Spac' Family" in the May, 1944, issue of The Toastmaster, (page 30) for interesting data on the background of these words. "Specie" is commonly used in English with reference to money. Payment is to be made "in specie", that is, in coin. The confusion arises from the fact that "specie" is singular form, while "species" appears to be plural. However, the latter is used for both singular and plural. Thus we may have one species of plants or animals, or several species, using the same form for both. The best usage is to suppress the final syllable when you use it in the singular, so that it sounds like "spe shiz" while in the plural it has the long sound, pronounced "sp sheez".

Helicopter

What is the correct pronunciation of this new airship's name?

The Dictionary gives it a short "e" in the first syllable, with accent on the third syllable. Call it "hell i COP ter Nineteen and Forty-Four

Is that the right way to mention the year?

No. If you wish to put "and" in, better say "nineteen hundred and forty-four." Otherwise make it simply "nineteen-forty-four". Good usage does not require the use of "and" in either case.

For Club Improvement

From the Bulletin of District Four, Northern California and Nevada, we lift these suggestions:

The District Governor suggests two ideas whereby each club could improve itself during the coming year.

1. Establish a club bulletin board for reporting in the meeting room all club, district and T. I. bulletins and announcements, so that individual members may read and be informed. (Also, if possible, put out a club bulletin either weekly or monthly, carrying programs and other club news.)
2. Elect a club secretary who will regularly report attendance and items of interest to the District Governor each month. This is a weak spot in many clubs, and neglect of it breaks down the coordination of club, district, and T. I. Home Office.

From Minnesota

At the speech contest in King Boreas Toastmasters, of St. Paul, all six contestants spoke on the same subject — "TOLERANCE". The speakers were kept in an adjoining room, so that they could not hear what their fellow-speakers said on the subject. The surprising fact is that no two speakers treated the subject in the same way. Six different and most interesting discussions of the subject were presented.

Mankato Toastmasters have developed a plan for voice improvement. They call it "Can You Top This?" It is used by the Table Topicmaster, who reads some statement or quotation which carries a lot of feeling, and then asks three or four members to give the same line, trying in each case to give it more or better expression. For example, he may say, "Oh! Oh! What a toothache I have!" Or he may quote, "Life is real, life is earnest." Or he may bring in the Ancient Mariner, with "Hold off! unhand me, graybeard loon!" It is fun-producing, and it does break the monotony of voice characteristic of many speakers.

A Topic Bank

Waterloo Toastmasters plan the installation of a new department in their weekly Bulletin, to be called "The Topic Bank." Members are invited to "deposit" subjects which they would like to hear discussed. These subjects will enable the Program Committee to gain a better understanding of the interests of the members. The "bank" will constitute a permanent "fund" of subject material on which the Committee can draw.

Confidentially

You and the Library

Your local Public Library can be a great help to you and your Club. Ask for reference material on speech subjects. Ask for textbooks on speech in all its forms. Ask for almost any sort of information, and you will find it.

Perhaps you can help your Library. You might inquire if The Toastmaster Magazine would be welcome in its reading room. The Magazine is sent, free of charge, to the Public Library in any city where there is a Toastmasters Club. All it takes is a request from the Club. Many libraries now enjoy this service. Would yours like it?

When You Write

Whether it is a letter or a postcard, be sure always to show your correct address on it, including zone number, if any. Time is saved and mistakes avoided if you say where you want the reply sent. Unless you write very legibly, it is better to type your name in addition to the written signature. It is surprising how hard it may be for someone else to read a signature which is entirely clear to you.

The Educational Committee

With few exceptions, the clubs have appointed their Educational Committees. With a few additional exceptions, the Committees are working. Without exception, the club whose Educational Committee is functioning efficiently is a growing, enthusiastic, hard-working club.

It is the goal of the Educational Bureau to help every club to make the fullest use of the plans and materials, and to give every member the full benefit. You, as a member, should know that:

1. Every new member of the club is supposed to have his own copy of Basic Training, and that the Educational Committee helps him to get the last nickel's worth of good from it.
2. Every new member should receive a special "Greetings" package, handed to him at the time of his induction, to give him a good start.
3. The Educational Bureau provides, free of charge, copies of "The Four Folders" to every member, on request.
4. The Educational Bureau has had prepared enough different forms for speech evaluation so that your club can use a new form each month for a period of ten months, and that these forms are furnished without charge in small amounts, each sufficient for one month's use, on request.
5. The Educational Bureau has on hand five Parliamentary Scripts, prepared for practical experience for the members, and that these Scripts are sent one set at a time, without charge, to any club which will make use of them.
6. The Educational Bureau, in common with all other users of paper, is limited in the amount of paper it can obtain and so has to ask your cooperation in being economical.

Match These Words

For each word in the column at the left there is a meaning shown in the column at the right. Match them by numbers. That is, if the definition or synonym for "procrastinate" is Number Four in the column at the right, place the figure 4 after "procrastinate". When you have completed work on the twenty words, turn to page 22 and check up on your score.

If you have correctly matched 16 or more of the words and definitions, you are entitled to brag about it, modestly. If you got 12 of them right, you may flatter yourself that you are not too dumb. But if you scored not more than 10 of them correctly, say nothing about it to anyone, but reach for the dictionary.

"THE MYSTERY TO ME"

CHARLES N. TYSON, of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, past Governor of District Nine, is puzzled. Having been a Toastmaster for a number of years, he wonders how anyone can quit. Here is what he writes about it:

"The mystery to me is how any man can once be a Toastmaster and then drop out. The real, solid results of prolonged effort are so much greater than those attained by sporadic attempts. I have put in many pleasant hours in the attempt to pay the debt I owe to Toastmasters, but find the debt still climbing higher and higher as the work in the Toastmasters keeps on paying and paying me. So long as I live, this great movement will find me in it, somewhere."

Put On a Show

By FRANKLIN McCRILLIS, of Seattle,
Member of Board of Directors, Toastmasters International.

THE curtain rises! There is a breathless hush—a stir of expectancy. The show is on! Every stage show you have ever seen was like that. The curtain went up and within a very few minutes you knew whether the show was a success or not. You knew whether it was holding your interest, whether you were excited about it, or whether you were going to be content to sit back and watch “just another performance.”

Don't fool yourself. Every Toastmasters meeting is a show. If you want it to be a good one, use your imagination. Put on a show.

The president does not use an unvarying formula. He does not open the meeting each week with the same old hackneyed phrases. He even finds a new way to say, “The meeting will come to order.” It can be done. He varies the words of welcome. He makes his introductions something different. He does his best to share his pleasurable excitement over the evening's prospects with all those present.

When he presents the Toastmaster of the Evening, he tries to set the pace for a lively program. He builds the Toastmaster up—not down. He makes the audience like him, so that it will be easy for him to cause the audience to want to enjoy his show. And then the Toastmaster follows through. Like the President, he avoids stale and worn-out phrases and formulas. He acts as a springboard from which the speakers are launched into their flights of speech. He maintains the interest.

All this is possible because those involved in the program have prepared and planned. A good show takes a lot of preparation.

There is room for endless variety in the standard Toastmasters Club meeting. Take the impromptu discussion period for example. Most of the clubs start with a series of one-minute impromptu talks. Some get into a rut, such as always using current events. They should try other methods. Plenty are available.

The clubs in Seattle use the plan of placing a number of subjects in a hat, which is kept at the end of the table. Each man in turn walks to the end of the table, takes a slip out of the hat, and immediately speaks on the subject written on the slip. In the Totem Club recently, the impromptu period was placed at the end of the program. Each of the regular program speakers had pretended that he was an attorney arguing a case. When they had finished, each of the other members voted “guilty” or “not guilty”, giving a one-minute explanation of reasons for the decision.

There is hardly any limit to the possible variations in the impromptu discussion period. The same is true of the principal speech program. If you use imagination, you can change the theme and the manner of procedure in a thousand ways. The Aberdeen Toastmasters Club recently spent an evening on controversial subjects. Each speaker had an opponent, and time was allowed for one-minute rebuttals. It was not strictly a debate, but it gave good practice in argument, but that extra minute of rebuttal was the source of a lot of fun.

The Toastmaster can plan his program as a Congressional investigation, a meeting of an O. P. A. Board, a post-war planning committee, a discussion by military leaders of the progress of the war, a Chamber of Commerce session, a political convention, or any other of numerous groups whose work ties in with the affairs of the day. The Program Service of the Reader's Digest issues a monthly panel discussion service, giving subjects and listing reference material, all of which is timely and of practical value to the Toastmasters Club. Since most clubs make up their program schedules months in advance, the Toastmaster has plenty of time to plan for an unusual demonstration.

Speech evaluation, too, may be varied. Seattle's Victory Toastmasters Club frequently uses the panel discussion plan for the individual critics. Four critics are appointed, but each man evaluates all the speakers on one phase of the work—attention getters at the start, construction and material, conclusion clincher, stage presence, and other details. In the Totem Club, the speaker is sometimes permitted to evaluate his own speech.

The General Critic may treat the entire club as a sales clinic. He analyzes what he believes the speaker tried to accomplish, and then asks the club to vote by show of hands as to whether the purpose was accomplished.

Ordinary details of the meeting can be made extraordinary. The Seattle Y. M. C. A. Toastmasters place a large card with the speaker's name on it in front of each speaker so that, as he speaks, his name is clearly associated with his face. In the Aberdeen Club, at the close of the program, a wheel is spun. Each member is numbered, and the man whose number comes up is the “publicity man” to report the meeting to local newspapers. Each man tries to outdo the others in publicity work, and results are good. Longview has fun from the shortage of restaurant help, by selecting one member each week to help in serving dinner.

We could go on and on with examples. There is no end of them for the thoughtful Toastmaster. The main point is—don't let your club's “show” go sour. Use your imagination. Make every meeting a new “hit show.”

Editorial

THE FUTURE IS BEFORE US Not what we have done, but what is yet to do, must engage our thought in this twentieth year of Toastmasters. The days which open before us invite us to new fields of service—to new opportunities for growth. The days behind us give assurance of the soundness of our principles, and the fundamental need for our work.

Our policies and purposes do not change, but our methods and our plans change and grow and evolve into new processes, to meet new needs. From the beginning we have been educational and inspirational in our movement. Our work has been cooperative, and on the basis of mutual helpfulness. Our progress has resulted from cooperative thinking and coordinated effort, all directed by the spirit of honest service.

From the beginning, we have prided ourselves on being a non-commercial, non-profit organization, operating on a low cost scale, devoting every dollar of income to the good of the clubs and their members. By this policy we have grown slowly, building on a strong foundation, developing technique even as we have developed men. By this same policy we shall continue to grow and build.

New methods have been introduced as needs arose. The district organization grew out of need for better supervision and direction. The Educational Bureau with its stimulating program of training came from other needs. Other developments will come as needed and as means are available to carry them through.

What do we need today, as we look forward? We need Imagination, Inventive Genius, Forebearance, Perseverance. We must let Imagination point the way. We must use Inventive Genius to devise new processes and new machinery to make our visions become realities. We must use Forebearance as we confer and compare, study, give and take, as methods are proposed, tried and adopted, or discarded. And we must Persevere in our forward movement.

We have come far enough to be sure of our ground. Keeping our feet solidly on that proved ground, let us go forward with confidence into the greater day ahead for Toastmasters.

MAKING HISTORY

We are making history today, for future historians to write. The whole world is in process of change, moving so rapidly toward some goal that there is no time to realize or evaluate progress. And yet some Toastmasters still claim to have difficulty in finding subjects on which to speak. With every newspaper and magazine shouting problems to be studied and solved, and with new topics of thrilling interest presenting themselves daily, the speaker with alert mind is overwhelmed by the flood of subjects which he would like to study and discuss. There can be no shortage of speech material for the thinking man. His trouble is to select. And there is tremendous value in the discussion of these current developments. The future of the world hinges on things taking place today. The editor of the San Francisco Call-Bulletin wrote concerning the invasion of Western Europe: "No one can doubt that this decisive hour in Europe is one of the great hours in all human history. It is a turning point in the affairs of mankind and civilization. The character and principles and ideals and institutions of all men and all nations will be determined in this hour."

We are living in the most significant days of the world's history. The times demand understanding and intelligent thought, careful discussion, wise decisions. Even in the most obscure Toastmasters Club there can be developed ideas which may have their influence on the future. It cannot be a question of where to find material and subjects, but rather, how to select from the abundance of subjects those which most urgently demand our thought and study. Every Toastmasters Club should be a forum for the discussion of America's future.

WARTIME CONVENTION

For the third year, Toastmasters International holds a convention restricted by war conditions to one day's time and to limited attendance. Not since 1941 have we had the opportunity to assemble in large numbers for a great, inspirational meeting. The value of the great convention is tremendous, but in present conditions we must get along with a meeting to transact urgent business, interfering as little as possible with military matters. While this year's convention will be limited in numbers, the attendance will be widely representative. At least eleven of our thirteen organized districts will be represented by their District Governors. This means the assembling of widespread experience, much fruitful discussion and much cooperative thinking, all of which will be beneficial. By means of proxies, all the clubs will have an opportunity to express their sentiments. Through the District Governors who attend, information can be carried directly to the clubs in the districts, and thus the movement will be drawn the closer together. Our convention, held under difficulties, will produce worthy results.

In the Districts

NEWLY elected District Governors take office at the time of the Annual Convention of Toastmasters International, to be held this year on July 29. Every such new Governor should have his plans well formulated by this time, for the year's work.

One of his first duties is to appoint the Lieutenant Governors to head up the various Areas. Such appointments should be made in consultation with the clubs in the Areas involved. Men who are to serve as Lieutenant Governors are the key to the success of the work of the District. These Lieutenants, together with the District Secretary (appointed by the Governor) and the Deputy Governors from the individual clubs, make up the District Committee, which coordinates and plans the activities in the District.

First comes the training of the members of the District Committee. Next is the training of the officers of the local clubs. Then come the various inter-club projects for the year. The District Manual outlines in detail the work to be done in a typical District. If the outline is followed, good work can be done.

Ideas of a District Governor

The newly elected Governor of one District has laid out this schedule for starting his year right:

1. First meeting of Lieutenant Governors, with District Secretary and Treasurer, to plan the year's work. Hold this meeting by August 15th.
2. By September 10, the Lieutenant Governor of each Area gets the Deputy Governors of all the clubs in the Area to meet for a training session in club administration.
3. Between September 15 and September 30, hold a meeting in each Area of the newly elected club presidents to study their duties and the proper club procedure.
4. By October 15, all club officers, elected in September, should have been installed. The Area Council will meet in each Area to study plans for the year's work in the clubs and the District.

Special Note: As soon as possible after August first, report the names and addresses of the Area Lieutenants to the Home Office, and make sure that each Area Lieutenant receives his working "kit" of supplies, including a copy of the "District Manual".

By the time we get all these things done, our next duties will loom up before us, so that no one will need to tell us what to do next.

APPRECIATION

At a recent meeting of Smedley Chapter Number One of Toastmasters, special notice was taken of the good work being done by the Educational Bureau, whose services have been largely used by the Number One Club. The following resolution of appreciation was adopted and transmitted to the Bureau:

Whereas, Smedley Chapter Number One of Toastmasters International has shared so largely in the benefits of the work of the Educational Bureau, by reason of the course in "Speechcraft", the instructions in Parliamentary Practice, the helps on Speech Evaluation, and the countless other published helps which are made available to the Toastmasters through The Toastmaster Magazine, "T-M-Ideas" and other publications, now therefore be it

Resolved, That we go on record as expressing our deep appreciation for this outstanding service to Toastmasters in general and to ourselves in particular; and that we commend the interest and active participation in the work of the Educational Bureau on the part of several of our members as being truly significant.

This Is My Problem

The Question:

I am President of a service club in our town. How should I thank a speaker when he has given us his talk? Is there any special formula for expressing appreciation?

The Answer:

This is altogether a matter of courtesy, and of adaptation to the needs of the moment. There is no formula. In fact, it would seem rather unfortunate, not to say inept, for the chairman to use any set form for such a purpose. If the speaker has said something especially timely or appropriate, you can mention that. If his speech has been entertaining, thank him for the fun he has created. If the speech was just ordinary, commonplace, thank him for taking the trouble to come over and talk. Use your common sense of the fitness of things. Above all, don't say too much. Don't be effusive, gushing, insincere. The best way to thank a speaker is to hold him for a moment after the meeting, to ask him for further information on some point, or to say that he made some special item clear.

One of the nicest, and also rarest, of all the ways to thank a service club speaker is to hand him a modest check, for which he has not asked, to cover his expense in coming to the meeting. In such a case, money really talks.

The Question:

How can I correct my careless mistakes in speech? I have a fair knowledge of the rules of grammar, but don't use the knowledge. Frequently I catch myself using words and phrases which I know are wrong, but habit is too strong for me. Is there any way I can help it?

The Answer:

Try penalizing yourself for each mistake. Drop a nickel or a penny in the "charity box" every time you say "ain't", or "I seen him", or "I haven't got none". Ask your family or your faithful friend to catch you in mistakes. Of course it will make you angry sometimes, but you want to correct the mistakes, don't you? You asked for it. Treat yourself with suggestion. Say to yourself, "Each time I say 'I never done it' I shall bite my tongue." Pick out the most annoying errors and set a price on each one. You will quickly become conscious of the mistake when you make it. Better still, stop to think before you speak. Then your language can be correctly phrased in advance.

The Question:

How can I stop a speaker who runs over time? I am not referring to the Toastmasters Club meeting, where the speakers are timed and notified, but how about it in some general meeting? The other day I had charge of the program in our Lions Club meeting, and the speaker kept on and on until half the crowd walked out. I didn't know what to do.

The Answer:

Make sure in advance that the speaker knows just how long he will have. Tell him that he has twenty-five minutes, starting at one o'clock, sharp. Then be sure he gets started at one. Lay your watch in front of him and explain that the meeting ends at 1:30 and that the members leave then. In other words, have a clear understanding before the speaker speaks. Then if he runs over time, rise and interrupt him with all courtesy, reminding him that the end has come. If everything else fails, say, "Mister Speaker, you can keep on as long as you like, but the meeting is adjourned, and we are leaving now."

Words In Season

Melons

The cantaloup is in season. There's a big crop of them this year. Perhaps it will help your enjoyment, as you dig into the golden fragrance, to know that this succulent cucumis borrows its name from the castle of Cantalupo, in Ancona Province, Italy, where the melon was first grown in Europe, from seed alleged to have been brought from Armenia. The annual dispute as to the correct spelling is on again, together with the tendency in many quarters to call it a "muskmelon" and be done with fanciful names. The "muskmelon" name came naturally from the smell and taste, and then it degenerated into "mushmelon", a name never deserved by so delicious a fruit.

Speaking of melons, you would hardly think them related to another favorite fruit now in season, the apple, but the old Latin word back of our generic term, melon, is melopepo, an apple-shaped melon, from the Greek, melo- pon, made up of melon, apple, plus pepon, a large melon. This Greek word, pepon, signified "cooked by the sun" or ripened. The Latin word for apple is malum, whence the botanical name for the apple family, Malaceae.

So there we go, getting apples and melons all mixed up. But we can tell them apart by the flavor and texture, if not by name. The word "apple" is a northern word, coming through the Anglo-Saxon and Old Norse and such languages, but even this seems to go back to the Latin, to Abella, (now Avella), in Campania.

Almost any sort of reasonably spherical fruit has been called an apple in the course of years. The tomato used to be called the "love apple". In the German language the potato is called the "earth apple". In French it is pomme de terre, "apple of the earth". But for genuine apple sauce or apple pie, we'll take the good old Baldwin, or Gravenstein, or Northern Spy, or some other standard variety.

IS YOUR CLUB LIKE THIS?

A letter received from a recently appointed chairman of the club's Educational Committee (only eight months late in getting around to the appointment) contains the following:

"I have been a member of our club for a year, and am firmly convinced that the Toastmasters Club is the finest thing anyone can belong to. Our club has been entirely devoid of anything along this educational line, and that is where we missed the boat. I am certainly going to work hard on this thing and hope ultimately to get the idea over to every member."

Almost all of the clubs have named their Educational Committees and are profiting by the new program. Every club is invited. None is compelled to take advantage, but the club which overlooks the Educational Committee surely is "missing the boat."

PASSING THE GAVEL

At the Conference of the Western Division of District One, held in Los Angeles on June 10th, H. K. Clinton was installed as Governor, following a notable program of panel discussions, culminating in the district speech contest.

Are People Ignorant?

America's educational system is supposed to be the best. The American people are supposed to be intelligent, well-informed, up-to-date. But is this the case?

Dr. Hadley Cantril, of Princeton University's Office of Public Opinion Research, recently published startling facts about the ignorance of American adults on world affairs, as revealed by various polls. Here are some of the results:

Nearly six out of every ten adult Americans do not know that the United States never joined the League of Nations.

Nearly four out of ten do not know what a tariff is.

Nearly seven out of ten do not know how a peace treaty is approved under our Constitution.

Six out of ten have never read about the Atlantic Charter, and nineteen out of twenty are unable to name even one of its provisions.

These statements sound almost incredible, and yet they are based on careful research by competent men. They indicate that the instruments of public information, technically adequate, have failed to inform and impress the American people adequately on the crucial issues of our day.

The radio, the press, the motion pictures, the schools and the churches should take such facts fully into account. So should the Toastmasters Clubs. We have a definite responsibility and opportunity. We must be informed, and then we must spread the information.

Some evening in your club, try a quiz on some of the topics mentioned above. It may prove illuminating. It may support or confute the conclusions reached by Dr. Cantril, but it cannot fail to reveal surprising lack of information on important matters, even among your own members.

WELL SAID

I saw the winter wheat growing, too, so fast that the Kansas wind whistled in astonishment; the meadow larks were jingling a pocketful of golden song about it, all along the way. . . . I saw the smoke of Ohio factories writing doom on the sky for the Axis. I saw the pumps in the California oilfields, pumping the blood of war right out from under the bed of the Pacific Ocean.—Donald Culross Peattie, in "Journey into America".

That was the kind of evening it was. The sky was range-red in the west; as though it was all dolled up for a date itself, and it was using a couple of stars for diamond clips to hold up its evening gown.—William Irish, in "Phantom Lady".

The belief that people can achieve social security by voting for it has become the foremost superstition in the United States.—Henry C. Link, in "The Rediscovery of Man".

A great many political speeches are parricides; they kill their own fathers.

MAKE A NOTE OF IT

As you listened to a speaker, you caught a glowing phrase or a striking sentence; a stimulating idea; an inspiration for a speech theme.

Did you put the thought on paper, or trust it to memory?

In your reading, you found a clever saying; a graphic use of words; a pointed illustration; a striking word picture. It was worth remembering. It suggested a speech subject, or a treatment of some thought you may wish to use.

Did you remember it? Probably not, unless you made a note of it.

To enrich your mind, keep always at hand some cards or slips of paper, or a convenient note book. As you read or as you listen, use your pencil. Make a note of everything you think worth remembering. Save it until you have time to reconsider it. If it still seems good on second reading, put it into your permanent file. If it loses its charm when you think it over, discard it.

Use this method to remember good jokes which you can repeat. Use it to catch the ideas which come up in your mind, and which will be lost if you do not set them down.

Save things worth remembering. Make a note.

We must keep on buying while they keep on fighting.
